The most visible change to the fair this year was the Armory's building's newly restored wood floor, made with reclaimed southern pine. In the past, the Art Show has used grey carpets in the aisles. Still, it's always interesting to see what choices dealers make regarding the floors in their booths. Some had carpeting, others kept it raw. Petzel, whose booth is the first you see when you enter, solved the problem handily by using the space for an artwork: a mirrored floor piece by Walead Beshty.
